Title: Introduction to integrable systems

Abstract: Most things in the world are governed by nonlinear laws and therefore exhibit, in the long run, very complicated behavior. However, there are dynamical systems which, despite being nonlinear, behave in a surprisingly regular way. Such systems are known as integrable. I will give an elementary introduction to this area with an emphasis on discrete integrable systems, which is my current area of research.